Spring Is Around the Corner: DAYBREAK GARDENING TIPS

This is the time of year to plan for spring and summer planting. Think water-wise or drought tolerant plants. There are a large number of trees, shrubs, perennials and even some annuals that will grow with less water.

See your horticulturist or nursery professional for their recommendations.

Starting in April, Red Butte Gardens will be offering numerous classes, workshops, and other native plant events. Some of which are about waterwise techniques and drought tolerant plants.

Continue to water broadleaf evergreens to prevent leaves from drying out during periods of bright sunshine or windy conditions.

Want a breath of spring? Force branches into early bloom such as forsythia, cherry, quince, plum, eastern redbud, lilac, magnolia, serviceberry or other early flowering trees and shrubs. Place the cut branches in water in a bright, sunlit place to trigger early flowering.

Even without snow to cover their food sources, birds will continue to enjoy supplemental food and water, so keep birdfeeders and water troughs filled.

Late February is usually the best time to prune most fruit trees. For information on how to prune specific fruit varieties, seek professional advice.

Now is a good time to start indoor seeds for later, outdoor planting. And if you want to know more about starting plants from seed and have fun at the same time, enroll in Red Butte Garden's spring propagation workshop. Check our Calendar at www.redbuttegarden.org for upcoming Classes.

LIVING SUSTAINABLY SIMPLY MEANS LIVING WELL

Sustainability is at the heart of everything we do in Daybreak. That is to say, every facet of the community has been designed to make life better: to sustain a vibrant community, a vigorous economy, and a healthy environment.

Daybreak is designed on "The 5-Minute Rule." Every home is within a 5-minute walk from something great that you use every day: a park, pool, restaurant, transit line, elementary school, and more.

Coming Soon...American Academy of Innovation

A new charter school serving students in grades 6 to 12, is coming to Daybreak, and it will offer a unique blend of academic programming using experiential learning combined with technical education, 21st-century skills, and international partnerships. This school seeks to improve student learning by identifying the specific learning style of individual students, using the methods best suited to the students' individual strengths to teach each concept, and building ownership of education in each student.

Students who graduate from the American Academy of Innovation will be equipped with knowledge, critical thinking skills, technical know-how, teamwork, responsibility, accountability, and other leadership skills.

The construction of the school facility is currently underway and the school is scheduled to open its doors to students Fall 2016. For more info: www.aaiutah.org.
